Identifies Best-in-Category Award Winners

Who We Are
Franchise Business Review has been researching franchise companies since 2005. In eight years, we have surveyed thousands of franchisees, worked with hundreds of brands, and assisted countless entrepreneurs in their search for a franchise business.

Each year, we release our much-anticipated Guide to Today’s Top Franchises, which lists our annual franchisee satisfaction award-winners—the top franchise brands based on our survey. Originally dubbed the “FBR50” because it included only 50 companies, Franchise Business Review’s Top Franchises list has grown to include 200 companies spread across four size categories. The FBR50 is the only awards program to look at actual franchisee satisfaction data.

In addition to providing the base for our awards program, our research supplies us with a considerable amount of data, as well as a unique view of franchising from the inside. We supplement our research by conducting interviews with senior executives and franchisees at many of the top franchise companies, and those findings make up the editorial for this report.

What We Do
To compile the data for this report, we surveyed over 26,000 franchisees, representing more than 350 brands and 125,000 franchise units/locations. Our survey is open to all North America-based franchise companies at no cost.

We email our survey to all active franchisees within a system. Franchisees answer 33 benchmark questions ranking their franchise system in the areas of financial opportunity, training and support, leadership, operations and product development, core values (e.g., honesty and integrity of franchisor), general satisfaction, and the franchisee community. An additional 16 questions ask franchisees about their market area, demographics, business lifestyle, overall enjoyment running their franchise, and role in the franchisee community. From this data, we identify our list of Top Franchises, which includes companies with above average satisfaction among the companies we surveyed.

Why Satisfaction Matters
By all accounts, 2013 is a great time to buy a franchise. Franchise brands are outperforming non-franchised businesses, franchise units are experiencing healthy returns, and many people who’ve been considering franchise opportunities for several years are finally committing to their dream business. But, no matter how rosy things look for franchising as a whole, nothing guarantees a franchisee or a franchise concept will be successful. Prospective franchisees must thoroughly research every opportunity they are considering to determine if the concept is viable and the right fit for them.

One of the best ways to know if a franchise opportunity is really as good as it appears is to look at its franchisee satisfaction data. Not all brands survey their franchisees, but those who do offer a wealth of information on the system’s leadership, culture, training and support, financial outlook, and franchisee community.

A Closer Look at the Top Franchises

The companies we feature in this report come in all different sizes, investment levels, and industries but have one thing in common—high franchisee satisfaction. Two hundred brands—45 more than last year—exceeded our benchmark for high franchisee satisfaction to make our list of award-winning companies. We dig into the specific survey findings related to franchisee satisfaction later on in this report, but, first, it’s worth discussing some of the other common themes for 2013 that emerged from our research.

Hot Concepts/Investment Levels

Senior care, child services, food, and fitness were all hot industries in 2012 and continue to be popular in 2013. As the real estate market improves, we’re also seeing increased popularity in franchise concepts that sell real estate (Sotheby’s International) and offer home services (CertaPro Painters).

Some established brands, like 1-800-GOT-JUNK?, are expanding into sub-brands and services that leverage the abilities and strengths of the main brand. WOW 1 DAY! Painting, a house-painting concept, employs some of the same scheduling and efficiency processes used in 1-800-GOT-JUNK? and has experienced better-than-expected growth in the last year.

“We’ve got 21 franchises currently, and that’s all growth that’s happened in about a year and half. It’s growing faster than we experienced in the early days of 1-800-GOT-JUNK?,” said founder Brian Scudamore.

We also see more new brands and “out of the box” concepts emerging as the economy improves. Pinot’s Palette is a Houston-based BYOB painting studio—part of what’s being called the “sip and paint” industry. The Traveling Photo Booth offers photo booth rentals for parties and events.

The variety of business types seen in our list of Top Franchises proves no particular franchise model guarantees better franchisee satisfaction over another, but this year’s most satisfied sectors are Sports & Recreation, Travel, Senior Care, Fitness, and Finance & Tax.

Renewed Focus on Growth

Most franchisors have regained a bullish mindset when it comes to growing their brands. Brands like PostNet that put franchise sales on the back-burner in order to focus on internal operations and enduring the recession have re-launched themselves in 2013 with changes to their concept with plans to attract an influx of new customers and new franchisees. Like most businesses, PostNet was hit hard by the recession as the retail pack-and-ship industry continues to mature, but by migrating to neighborhood business centers, the company came into 2013 with strong sales, a focus on growth, and satisfied franchisees.

“Our goal is to add 24 – 36 new PostNet centers in 2013 with an organizational emphasis on increasing the revenue and improving the profitability of each and every PostNet franchise. We also anticipate double-digit center-level revenue growth as compared to 2012 as a result of the changes we’ve made with the help of our franchisees and franchisee leadership,” said PostNet CEO Steven Greenbaum.
This renewed focus on growth by the franchisor can impact the franchisee both positively and negatively, depending on the brand, and it’s something prospective franchisees should consider in their due diligence. Is the franchise focused on smart growth or just fast growth? How will the brand’s growth aspirations affect its culture, franchisee community, fees, and royalties?

Along with the increased focus on growth, franchisors have increased their emphasis on marketing and advertising. Some brands that slowed down their advertising to reduce their franchisees’ expenses have re-upped the required marketing contribution for franchisees, taking it back to where it was pre-2008—or even higher. Although increased marketing costs can cause dissatisfaction among franchisees, when done right, it can drive increased revenues at the unit level. A brand that charges franchisees less for marketing isn’t necessarily a better brand for franchisees—nor is a brand that charges more. Potential franchisees need to carefully look at what a brand offers as part of its marketing program (Do they provide national support only? Local assistance and training?) and what current franchisees say about a brand’s marketing support.

Top-rated Firehouse Subs is an example of a brand that has increased its emphasis on marketing in recent years.

“We place more importance than ever on advertising. Some brands, when there’s the prospect of things getting tough, they pull the reins in a little bit. We look at it as opportunity to get ahead of those brands,” Firehouse CEO Don Fox said.

In early 2009, Firehouse, like most other quick-serve restaurants, was experiencing negative system sales and a decline in same-store sales. Rather than pull back on marketing, Firehouse asked franchisees to invest an additional 2% of revenues in advertising to increase their efforts. Both the franchisor and the franchisees benefited from this leap.

“Our average unit volume went from $560,000 in mid-2009 to $731,000 now. It was fantastic to finish 2012 as we did. It was a record year in every aspect of what we do,” Fox said.

Governmental Impact

Government regulation and taxation are always hot topics in business, but they really rose to the top for franchisors and franchisees in late 2012 and 2013.

The end of Bush-era payroll tax cuts and the implementation of Obamacare both affected franchising, although the degree of impact depends on the particular industry and/or franchise concept. Senior care, for example, was both positively and negatively affected by the health insurance requirements. The new law actually accentuates the need for home care, FirstLight HomeCare CEO Jeff Bevis told us, but franchisees who employ dozens of caregivers may face new insurance requirements.

“We found more and more people were asking about the new law and were almost anxiety-ridden about how they were going to cover employee benefits,” Bevis said. “What we’ve done as a proactive step is create webinars for our owners and candidates, walking them through ‘Here’s how our business is affected by the Affordable Care Act.’”

The food sector also was significantly affected by both the healthcare law and the payroll tax increase (because consumers have less take-home pay to spend on food). Firehouse Subs’ CEO Fox says he has held focus groups with his franchisees and employees to see what the corporate office can do to ease compliance.

So, what does all this mean for someone who’s not yet a franchisee?

Even if the latest round of regulations doesn’t affect a particular franchise brand, prospective franchisees need to consider regulatory activity as part of their decision to buy a franchise. What’s going on in the government? Where are the White House’s priorities (e.g., education, defense, increasing minimum wage) and how will they affect business?

For some industries, you may want to consider how involved the franchisor is in government relations. Firehouse Subs CEO Fox, for example, has spent a significant amount of time in the last two years focused on Washington, D.C., working with the National Restaurant Association to lobby on his franchisees’ behalf.

“In an ideal world, you hope everybody has equal access to our government, but that’s not always the case. If we’re able to leverage our position in the industry to help make that happen, then that’s what we want to do,” Fox said.

Lending

Access to lending continues to be a relevant topic for franchisors and potential franchisees in 2013. Although the tightness of the lending landscape has leveled off, heightened lender expectations are here to stay.
Even if the latest round of regulations doesn’t affect a particular franchise brand, prospective franchisees need to consider regulatory activity as part of their decision to buy a franchise.

“You need a strong brand and a strong candidate and to be well capitalized,” said Fox of Firehouse Subs. Fox said the strength of the brand is even more important than the candidate in many cases.

Many franchisors told us they hadn’t had a problem finding financing for top-tier candidates—developers with a strong background of successful business ownership—but individual, first-time business owners may still have difficulty.

Some brands, like FirstLight HomeCare and Marco’s Pizza, have added staff specifically to help franchise candidates navigate the lending waters.

“I have one person on the staff whose sole job is helping franchisees obtain financing. In a fast-growth environment like we’re in, we need to do everything we can to help that process along,” said Ken Switzer, vice president and CFO of Marco’s.

People looking to invest in a lower-cost franchise concept (those under $100K) may be able to avoid the lending situation all together.

“In most cases, we’ve discovered that people who really want to own a Soccer Shots business find a relative or friend who will invest or lend the necessary funds,” said Justin Bredeman, partner at Soccer Shots, which offers youth soccer programs. “Our business model allows for relatively quick cash flow and is operationally profitable out of the gates. Most of our franchisees pay off their loan in less than 15 months after they start their business.” Soccer Shots’ average initial investment is only $16,238.

Transparency

Almost all the CEOs we interviewed for this report have added an Item 19 to their franchise disclosure documents (FDD). The Item 19 includes information on earnings, expenses, and other factors to help potential investors get a sense of what they can expect to make as franchisees.

“In the next 4-5 years, it’s going to become almost impossible for brands that don’t have an item 19 to grow effectively,” said Bevis of FirstLight HomeCare.

“How can a franchisor have an intelligent conversation trying to award or sell a franchise and not be willing to talk about earnings?” added Tony Padulo, vice president of development for The Goddard School. “The first thought a perspective franchisee is going to have is ‘Why aren’t they sharing earnings with us? What’s wrong with the business?’"

It’s important for prospective franchisees to understand not all Item 19s are created equal. Some include financial information from only a handful of high-performing franchisees while others include only gross revenues. A good Item 19 should be a systemwide representation of earnings and include a breakdown of both gross and net earnings.

Beyond the Item 19, transparency in general is a big discussion topic for franchisors in 2013—and it’s something prospective franchisees should consider as they research different brands: Just how much does the corporate office share with its franchisee community?

In our experience, the more a franchisor shares, the stronger the brand and the more engaged the franchisee community. Transparency starts from Day One of your research into a brand—what do they offer you upfront? What data do they provide to assist you in your research? And then what do they do once you’re a franchisee? What financial information do they share with franchisees?

Multi-Unit Ownership

Multi-unit ownership has always been common among food franchisees, but lately we’ve seen an increased interest in multi-unit businesses by both franchisees and franchisors in all industries. For franchisors, multi-unit ownership means more units with fewer franchisees to support. For franchisees, owning more than one franchise location (or multiple territories) can be very profitable because of the cost advantages and efficiencies that come with size.

“When you’re living or dying from one unit, it can be hard to make a living and create a legacy for your family, but when you get larger and have multiple units, it becomes much easier,” said Jennifer Durham, vice president of franchise development for Checkers & Rally’s—one of our top brands for satisfaction among both single and multi-unit operators.
Investing in multiple franchise units requires even more due diligence than investing in just one. Franchisees make a bigger investment, and, as a result, take a bigger risk than single-unit operators. Potential franchisees who want to own multiple units need to look closely at the franchise system and whether it’s set up for multi-unit ownership. Does the franchise have the resources and systems in place to actually support multi-unit operators? Are the brand’s business plan, marketing, systems, corporate management, and culture set up in a way that supports managing stores from afar (or at least not from the premises on a daily basis)?

“Something prospects should look for in a concept is whether there is a good blend of single and multi-unit owners in the system and how they’re doing from a results perspective. If there is a balance of both that are growing and succeeding, it speaks to the maturity of the franchisor and the brand that they can sustain growth not only for single operators but for both,” said Two Men and A Truck president Randy Shacka. Two Men also scores high in satisfaction among multi-unit operators.

Even if you’re not interested in running more than one unit today, you may be in the future, so it’s worth considering a brand’s ability to support you as you grow.

“The way we look at it, every single-unit franchisee has an opportunity to become a multi-unit franchisee. Whatever you say you’re going to be in your business plan isn’t necessarily what you’ll turn out to be,” Durham said.

Franchisee Satisfaction
Overall franchisee satisfaction in 2013 remains high and largely unchanged from 2012. In general, the areas where we tend to see lower satisfaction are the areas of profitability and systemwide communication. While franchisees in general are still not completely satisfied with their business’s current financial performance, 68% have a positive outlook for the long-term growth opportunity of their franchise business.

Communication is always an area of discussion on our survey and probably one of the areas most commented on by franchisees. No franchisee ever complains a franchise company communicates TOO much, so as a prospective franchisee, you should research a brand’s communication (methods, frequency, two-way communication, level of franchisee input, etc.) carefully. You may get a sense of a system’s communication strengths and weaknesses as you conduct your research—are they quick to respond to your questions, do they provide lots of materials online and in-person? Remember, however, that the person you’re communicating with is most likely a salesperson who has a stake in the game and who won’t be your point of contact once you’re a franchisee. Ask for examples of how the corporate office communicates with franchisees on an ongoing basis, and talk to current franchisees about the accessibility of the executive team.

Another common area for lower franchisee satisfaction is long-term support and training. We often see franchisees at the 3- to 5-year mark becoming less satisfied or less engaged. When looking at a particular franchise concept, potential franchisees should carefully research what they’ll be getting out of the brand not just at start-up but three, five, and ten years out. Be sure to speak with current franchisees who’ve been operators for more than five years. Ask them what the long-term, ongoing support is like and what they get out of their royalties.

“I think the big thing to understand is what kind of infrastructure you’re getting for your dollar. You’re giving something away each month, so make sure you are getting something for that dollar beyond just a flashy name,” said WOW 1 DAY! Painting franchisee Brent Sharpless.

What It Takes to Be Successful
Brian Scudamore, founder of 1-800-GOT-JUNK? and CEO of WOW 1 DAY! Painting, says he looks for proof of three key characteristics in his franchise candidates: leadership, attainment, and tenacity.

“Leadership to show candidates have what it takes to get out there and lead a team, attainment to show they know how to set a goal and achieve it, and tenacity to show...
You don't necessarily have to be passionate about what your business does (or have previous experience in it for most concepts) but you have to be passionate about running a business and following a franchise model.

Obviously, the skills and attributes needed to be successful in a franchise depend to some degree on the type of business and the industry. Some sectors, like child services or senior care, are more people-driven and therefore require more in the way of empathy and interpersonal skills. Other sectors, like food, may require some knowledge and experience in the industry to succeed.

“We are very picky about the franchisee and their match with our system because we very much rely on a local store owner to know what’s happening with the birds in their area,” said Jim Carpenter, CEO of Wild Birds Unlimited. “They have to really have a passion for taking the products we sell and making them match what’s happening in a local area.”

Regardless of the sector or business model, there are certain necessary skills and attributes that carry across all of franchising. Franchise brands across the board tell us they look for people with strong people management skills, as well as networking, marketing, and operational expertise.

“We’re looking for people who can manage others well and build a team well,” said FirstLight’s Bevis. “They’re going to be either out in the community networking with referral sources to acquire clients, or they’re going to be interviewing and managing their caregiver team.”

“I think you can’t go wrong if you have a sales and marketing background just because you are selling a brand and selling yourself and it’s not dissimilar from starting a business on your own,” added WOW 1 DAY! Painting franchisee Sharpless.

The franchisors and franchisees we spoke with all agreed passion is a major requirement—whether your business is window-washing or soccer-coaching. You don’t necessarily have to be passionate about what your business does (or have previous experience in it for most concepts) but you have to be passionate about running a business and following a franchise model.

Last but perhaps most important, prospective franchisees must have enough money—not just to buy into the franchise but to finance the start-up and the early months of running the franchise. Some concepts have a longer runway than others, meaning it can take several years for a store to sustain a healthy and stable cash flow.

“No opening is ever certain,” said Fox of Firehouse Subs. “It’s important franchisees have their eyes wide open. That’s one of the reasons we scrutinize personal finances—what do you really need to live on? Potential franchisees need to understand it may take lots of frugality and they may need to pull the reins in a little bit in the beginning.”

Pros & Cons of Franchising

There are many advantages to buying a franchise versus opening your own business. Franchisees get an established brand, a pre-tested system that works, and the expertise, training, and support of an experienced corporate office.

“I think the model is great for people who are entrepreneurial but want to cut out some of the risk involved in starting their own venture,” said WOW 1 DAY! Painting franchisee Sharpless.

Many franchisees appreciate the “plug and play” nature of franchising—franchisors provide the technology platforms and materials operators need to handle tasks like invoicing, scheduling, marketing, and customer service. Franchisees tell us that purchasing a franchise enables them to stay out some of the more tedious parts of setting up a business so they can focus more on actually running the business.

“I don’t want to have to deal with building a web site, designing a brochure... I don’t think that’s a good use of my time,” said Soccer Shots franchisee Doug Schneider. “I think the franchise fee is worth it just from a professionalism that the franchisor brings to the company.”

Another huge advantage to franchising is the franchisee community. In franchise systems with a strong and active franchisee community, franchisees reap the benefits of learning from each other’s mistakes and successes. Running a business can, at times, be a lonely endeavor, but in franchising, you are never alone.

Many of the cons of operating a franchise are the same as running a non-franchise business. It’s a lot of work, especially in the beginning; it can take a while to establish a strong customer base and a predictable salary; and there’s no guarantee a business will be a success.

Some people turn to franchising thinking it will be easy. In many ways, it is easier than starting an independent business because of the systems and processes the franchisor provides, but starting a franchise is not easy.

“I think it’s more work than I anticipated, but that’s probably commensurate with any other business,” said WOW 1 DAY! franchisee Sharpless. “I think a lot of franchise purchasers try to buy themselves a job where they make X amount of dollars per year, and that’s about it. Here, we’re really trying to create an empire and change the way people view our services, so there’s a lot of work that goes into that.”

It seems obvious that being a franchisee requires a willingness to follow the franchise system’s proven methods and recommendations, but many franchisees fail in this area. In fact, many franchisees we talk to—franchisees that are now among the most successful for their brands—say one big mistake they made early on was not following the system closely enough.

“The reality here is you have to listen,” said Signal 88 Security franchisee Bill McCoy. “You have to do what people who have built a business and done it before you tell you to do. But when it’s your name and your business, it’s extremely easy to forget these people are here to help you.”

Franchisees say even if they ultimately succeeded using their own methods, it took longer, required more resources, and was far more exhausting than if they’d just used the franchisor’s system. If you are someone who wants more involvement in the set-up and design of your business, Sharpless recommends you consider a newer, smaller brand that encourages creative thinking and individuality rather than a mature brand with very clear, ingrained systems.

“With the WOW 1 DAY! model, it’s brand new, so there’s probably more flexibility for a franchisee than if you’re entering a mature system. For me, it’s been valuable to be one of the original franchise partners because we can think outside of the box a little more than some franchisees would allow,” Sharpless said.

Perhaps the biggest “con” to consider as you look at different franchise systems is that in a lot of industries, the corporate brand can define you. You’re no longer accountable for just your actions as a business owner so you want to find a franchise brand that has proven ethics and values similar to yours and a culture where you are comfortable. You want to know the corporate office will support you and look out for your best interests today and five years from today.

Many franchisees we talk to—franchisees that are now among the most successful for their brands—say one big mistake they made early on was not following the system closely enough.

Summary
2013 is a great year to buy a franchise—but it all comes down to being a part of the right system. Potential franchisees need to consider many factors as they narrow down their franchise search. Is the system set up to grow? How important are unit-level economics to the corporate office? Does the brand have a strong relationship with customers, lenders, AND franchisees? How will government regulation affect the industry in the future (and will the franchise system work to ease those effects)? Is transparency important to the brand (and do you see evidence in this in your research and discussions with franchisees)?

The 200 award-winning companies in this report provide a great starting point for someone looking to invest in a franchise opportunity. Nothing guarantees a franchise system will be the perfect fit, but talking to franchisees and looking at a brand’s franchisee satisfaction data is a great way to learn the full story about a brand.

Adrian Cardona
Rapid Realty NYC Franchisee
Brooklyn, NY

Why did you decide to buy a franchise?
From my experience as an agent, I knew that the rental industry was booming. It’s a recession-proof business. The earning potential for a rental brokerage is only limited by the time you put into it. Besides, I had made some very good friends at Rapid Realty—we all started together as agents—and they were opening franchises. I wasn’t about to get left behind!

Why did you choose your franchise?
No one can touch Rapid Realty in terms of rental inventory or experience. I love the high energy company atmosphere. Plus, it was an inexpensive investment, and they offered a ton of support, which was key for me as a first-time franchisee. The CEO, Anthony Lolli, personally helped me and my business partner secure great locations for our office and worked with us to keep our overhead low. That allowed us to open our second location after only a year.

What is the best part of being your own boss?
You’re automatically a success; you’re automatically separated from the majority of people who choose a different lifestyle. Just being able to say, “I own my own business” gives you instant self-respect and commands respect from others. Being a business owner is a journey, and there are so many things along that road, like watching your own employees succeed, that make it all worth it.

What is the worst part of being your own boss?
You’re responsible for the people under you, and regardless of how much you train them, advise them, and guide them, you can never be in complete control. Mistakes happen, and they reflect on you. It hurts to see your people fail, especially when it’s avoidable, but it happens.

What advice do you have for prospective franchise buyers?
If you enjoy a challenge, you respect growth, and you have an interest in business, the best thing to do is get involved. I don’t have much personal experience with regret, but from what I hear, it’s not pleasant. Don’t spend the rest of your life wondering what could have been. Get in there and try it. More is lost by indecision than by the wrong decision.

Rhea Lana’s Franchisee
Atlanta, GA

Why did you decide to buy a franchise? While on maternity leave shortly after having my son, my company announced a merger and I was given the opportunity to take a voluntary severance package. This was an answer to my prayers, as I had struggled with the thought of returning to the corporate world. I still had a desire for a career, but I wanted it to be on my terms.

Why did you choose your franchise? I learned about Rhea Lana’s from my sister. She knew I was looking for an opportunity to start my own business, and she raved about Rhea Lana’s. It was an opportunity to work a few months out of the year, while generating a full-time income. My husband liked the fact that it was a proven business model and required very little working capital. I also liked that there is a philanthropic element to the business. In an economy where every penny counts, I am thrilled to help families stretch their budgets. Just as satisfying is the fact that many unsold items are donated to worthy causes in the community. I researched other children’s consignment franchises and what attracted me to Rhea Lana’s was their value of innovation and commitment to service and excellence.

What is the best part of being your own boss? The best part is that my income level is in direct correlation with the amount of work invested. It’s a great feeling to have some control over my financial future. There was always a cap in the corporate world to my income. I have watched my business grow over the last 3 years, and it has blessed my family. Rhea Lana’s allows me to put my family first but still be able to make a full time income.

What is the worst part of being your own boss? When you are a small business owner, you need to quickly become adept in all facets of the business. From IT, accounting, marketing, operations—all responsibility rests on your shoulders. Rhea Lana’s provides a strong support network that has helped me evolve into a well-rounded business owner with the skills to handle these challenges.

FASTSIGNS®
More than fast. More than signs.

#1 Ranked Sign Franchise
Entrepreneur Magazine - 2011, 2012 & 2013

Find out why Entrepreneur has named FASTSIGNS the #1 Sign Franchise THREE years in a row.

“My career prior to FASTSIGNS required a lot of travel, so I was looking for a business opportunity that’s open five days a week with regular hours. With FASTSIGNS I get to own my own business, my schedule is flexible and I don’t have to work weekends. It’s the best of both worlds.”

Laurie Sigillito | FASTSIGNS of Durango, CO

FASTSIGNS is honored to offer veterans a franchise fee of $18,250 - a savings of 50% - and reduced royalties for the first 12 months.

Cash Plus
Startup Investment: $198,200 - $539,800
Cash Requirement: $100,000
Domestic Franchises: 53
Cash Plus is about as close to a bank as you can get in franchising. And, it’s in one of the strongest, non-fad industries in the country. Our upscale, bank-like retail outlets serve the 55% of the population who live paycheck to paycheck – that equates to approximately 165 Million Americans. That’s right, every consumer study points to the fact that more than 165 MILLION Americans need our services. By joining us, you have the option to invest in a single store or our 3-store express program. Our stores serve hard working middle income customers, the majority of whom have existing bank relationships. They patronize Cash Plus for the convenience we offer. For more information on Cash Plus opportunities, call (877) 227-4758 or visit www.cashplusinc.com.

Paul & Peggy Grenauer
The Salon Professional Academy Franchisees
Buffalo, NY

Why did you decide to buy a franchise?
We have always liked the business franchise model. Having owned a salon for 20 years, The Salon Professional Academy seemed a logical next step for us. The franchise model allows us to be years ahead of the game. We wouldn’t be as successful as we now were if not for our franchisor.

Why did you choose your franchise?
The franchise was chosen because of three main reasons. First, because it was in the same business we were accustomed to. Second, Redken recommended it as a quality franchise. Redken is a very well-run company from the top down, and their word goes a long way with us. Third, we were able to get to know our franchisor very well. Even though the franchisor was in a beginning stage, we believed in the idea and the people running the company.

What is the best part of being your own boss?
We love the entrepreneurial spirit! Both of our parents were entrepreneurs, so I guess you can say it is on our blood. Developing a team of people to work toward a common goal through all the highs and lows is exciting. Being affiliated with our franchisor allows us to be bigger than a mom-and-pop shop by having the resources of a large corporation at our fingertips.

What is the worst part of being your own boss?
Dealing with the public on a daily basis can wear on you, so it is important to take a break every so often to recharge the batteries.

Where do you see yourself in five years?
Continuing to develop our strong management team in order to open two more franchises.

What advice do you have for prospective franchise buyers?
Find a franchise you can really wrap your arms around. Spend time getting to know the franchisors. These are the people who you will be doing business with to start your franchise correctly. It is important they truly want to see you succeed. Consider a business coach, someone who will hold you accountable for your successes and failures, as you will have to do with your management team.

*Average unit volume figure is based on sales reports from all 99 franchise and 6 affiliate stores open for at least one year as of 12/31/2011. This average sales figure does not include costs of sale, operating expenses, or other costs or expenses that must be deducted from gross revenue or gross sales figures to obtain net income or profit. (Please refer to Item 19 of our franchise disclosure document for a detailed explanation of the costs and expenses of operating a Yogurtland store.) Of these 105 stores, 47 achieved sales at that average level or higher. A few franchisees’ sales results may differ from this average. 200 store count based on all stores currently open. Written substantiation for average sales and other claims will be made available to the prospective franchisee upon reasonable request.

FROM DOWN-SIZED TO RIGHT-SIZED
It’s not all boxes and moving trucks in the moving industry. It’s really about moving people forward, to the next step in life. You can be a part of that momentum by opening your own franchise.

Dennis Gallagher - Wayne County East, MI: “I knew for years I wanted to own my own business but when I was downsized, I dove into the wide world of franchising. I looked at several concepts including restaurants and oil changing stations before settling on TWO MEN AND A TRUCK®. The system support combined with the philanthropic reputation of the organization were the right fit for me.”

Bin There Dump That
Startup Investment: $65,000 - $75,000
Cash Requirement: $75,000
Domestic Franchises: 55
The ideal entrepreneur understands that what matters most is not what the business necessarily does, but what the business does for you. If you are comfortable following a system, a road map for success, and are excited about growing a brand, you could be the perfect Bin There Dump That franchise owner. What stops most people is fear and a lack of knowledge. At Bin There Dump That, we believe that knowledge dispels fear. With Bin There Dump That, what follows next is a simple six-step guided investigation to help you decide if this opportunity is for you. This is the underlying core of what makes franchising so successful—the system. Using a system-based approach doesn’t start when you become a franchise operator, it starts now with your due diligence. It begins as you perform a structured investigation into Bin There Dump That called “due diligence.” By the end of this exploratory process, you will know if Bin There Dump That is the right franchise for you.
